FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Milestone Voluntarily Recalls Flat Screen Television Mounts

Requests customer return of Sanus Simplicity SLF2 mounts showing signs of slipped elbow joint threads

SAVAGE, Minn. (August 2010) – Milestone AV Technologies, in cooperation with the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission (CPSC), today announced a voluntary recall of a limited number of Sanus Simplicity model SLF2 wall mounts for flat screen televisions exhibiting signs of slipped elbow joint threads. The slipped threads can cause the television to tilt forward or sideways and can reduce the amount of weight the unit can hold. Milestone is initiating the recall of units with slipped joint threads as a precaution.

The model was sold at at Costco locations. Milestone is working with the retailer and the CPSC to notify consumers who may have purchased the units. Consumers should conduct a visual inspection of the product to determine if it shows signs of the slipped joint threads. Instructions for conducting the visual inspection are located at www.milestone.com/SLF2recall. (Model numbers can be found on the UL sticker on the television interface.) All products with slipped threads will be replaced by Milestone at no charge to the consumer.

“Our preliminary research indicates that the issue affects a small percentage of the models in question, but we’re asking customers to conduct a self-inspection of the unit to confirm its durability,” said Laurie Englert, Director of Corporate Communications.

Those with questions can contact Milestone toll-free at (877) 894-6280 between 8 a.m. and 9 p.m. CST Monday through Friday and between 10:30 a.m. and 7:00 p.m. CST Saturday through Sunday.
